

How to Get the Smile You Want and Deserve With Dental Implants.

THE SMART CONSUMER'S GUIDE TO Implant Dentistry

*You've waited long enough.
Your time is now.*

Dear Friend,

As a dentist, I see people every day who are ashamed of their teeth. I hear stories of people who have had a "denture mishap" while out to dinner with friends, or most commonly comments made by a grandchild about their teeth or dentures.

Isn't it time to stop being embarrassed by your teeth?

Well now you can.

And while it won't be the panacea that fixes everything you don't like about your life, it can be the solution to more than you dreamed possible.

With the proper you treatment, you will finally be able to:

Who Benefits From Implant Dentistry?

- Denture wearers frustrated and tired of the problems of full dentures and partial dentures...sick of the goo..., the pain..., the embarrassment of teeth that can literally fall out in their plate.
- Those with bone loss that is causing changes to their appearance over time.
- Those who have missing teeth or those about to lose teeth due to decay or fracture.
- Accident victims from motor vehicles, baseball, football, or any other sport who want to regain function and appearance.
- Those with a mouthful of problems that just seem to get worse and worse.
- Those whose teeth are otherwise perfect- except for just 1 or 2 missing teeth.
- Those who want to recapture their youthful appearance.
- Those people who feel they are (as several patients have put it): Dental Disasters with no place to turn.

A Single Missing Tooth Can Cause Damage You Can't See or Feel Until It Is Too Late

Just one. That's right, ONE. A single missing tooth ultimately leads to shifting in each of your remaining teeth and can cause you to lose additional ones needlessly.

How can that be? I'll tell you. Most people with a missing side or back tooth say to themselves, "I can't see it. It doesn't hurt. I'll leave it like that." Unfortunately, these are the words of the average, uninformed person who doesn't realize the effects the loss of a tooth can cause.

Let's examine why: Mother Nature designed your teeth to work together, each tooth performing a certain function. When a member of the group is lost, more work is required out of the remaining teeth. They start to shift toward the hole left by the missing tooth, filling the vacuum.

The result? Your smile changes for the worse. This can cause headaches, jaw joint pain, broken teeth and teeth that wear too fast.

So now you have shifting teeth and an altered bite, and because your teeth won't re-shift and perfectly close the gap, you now have a difficult-to-clean trap for food and bacteria. And this sets the stage for other problems to develop, such as gum disease.

Gum disease is an infection that, left unchecked, spreads to the body doubling the risk for heart disease, heart attack and multiple other health related problems.

So what was once "just a missing tooth" in the back deserves more consideration than you may have thought...
